How does your team stack up?

advice:

The greatest asset and competitive advantage an organization can have is its employees. In this day and business environment with technology it's even more critical that companies stay focused on how employees affect the organizational performance. It's easy now to rely solely on technology to communicate and to overlook the more personal touch of employee engagement and communication. When did you last sit down with employees and listen to their ideas and feedback?

Over the last few decades we have seen many changes in business strategy on how to manage employees. There has been a move to be solely reliant on emails and phones to communicate. What is your organization doing to manage employees and communicating the values and goals of your company?

We see organizations focused on doing more with less and what about the affect on business of a limited workforce that all are facing?

We see for employees less opportunities and we see HR being looked at as a cost center and companies so short term focused and losing the long term view and the need from investing in its employees.

Companies who harness the human capital high energy are high performance teams with higher productivity.

HR plays a valuable role in the assessment and skill building of an organization.
HR helps build high performance teams in an organization
HR helps support the culture and the methods of communication
HR supports employee engagement...
